About Me

About Me

My name is Megan Fry, and I am a digital media creator, blogger, YouTuber, and artist. I studied Digital Media at the University of Houston, and I love turning an idea into something people can connect with.

I have cerebral palsy and am nonverbal. I use eye tracking on my Microsoft Surface Pro to communicate. It lets me write, design, edit videos, and share what I want to say, all with my eyes.

My creative work includes social media content, blog posts, graphic design, video editing, and websites. I use Adobe Photoshop, InDesign, and Premiere Pro, along with Canva, Wix, WordPress, and ArtRage.

I have created social content for The Pro Show, reviewed apps for BridgingApps, and taken on freelance digital media projects. In 2026, I organized and promoted Help Me Ride Again, a fundraiser for SIRE.

My portfolio brings together my college projects and the work I have done beyond the classroom.

SIRE

Fundraiser Organizer and Designer | 2026

I planned and promoted Help Me Ride Again, created marketing materials and social content, coordinated volunteers and activities, and shared my personal connection to SIRE.

The Pro Show

Social Media Manager | 2025

I created and posted short videos and images to promote episodes and connect viewers with the show.

BridgingApps

App Reviewer | 2025 to present

I review apps that can help people with disabilities, bringing my own experience with assistive technology to the work.

FreeFuse

Freelancer | 2024

I wrote YouTube scripts and completed a variety of digital tasks for freelance projects.

JustMyEye

Writer, Blogger, and Artist | 2013 to present

I share my experiences through my blog, create content for social media and YouTube, and make digital artwork using eye gaze.

Artistry

My love for art started long before college. ArtRage gave me a way to paint with my eyes and explore watercolor, oil, and acrylic effects on a screen. I have been creating digital artwork since 2013, and it still means so much to me to see an idea become a finished piece. I also built a Wix website to share my paintings and manage my online store. The work on the next page shows some of the pieces I have created over the years.

Starship – Robot Food Delivery at the University of Houston

August 30, 2020 · Leave a comment · Edit

One of the benefits of living in a dorm on campus is there are those cute robots that will deliver food right in front of your dorm. This is really cool if you have a disability. Just get the app called STARSHIP and you are ready to go! It works with your meal plan! 😊

My Journey Coming To The University of Houston

August 18, 2018 · 11 Comments · Edit

From the time I was born to being a freshman at my hometown's university, Houston has been where I felt the safest to call home. Growing up in one of Houston's suburbs, The Woodlands was one of the stepping stones that raised me up to be an independent woman as I am today....

Teen with Cerebral Palsy Finds Acceptance in LGBTQ+ Community

August 20, 2016 · Leave a comment · Edit

(WOMENSENEWS)—Being born with any kind of disability can outcast you. Already, you are sitting in a corner feeling like there is nowhere you belong. As a bisexual girl with a disability, I'm beyond trying to fit in. When I was born, I lost oxygen, which led me to have cerebral palsy. I am nonverbal and...

My V8 Morning Routine!!!

July 7, 2023 · Leave a comment · Edit

A typical morning routine for me starts with a really hot shower to start with while untangling my curly hair with the help of an electric hairbrush. To top it off, I love to make omelets. And of course, I have V8 energy drinks to help me start the day right!...

Movie Poster

For this college project, I used Adobe Photoshop to remove backgrounds, combine images, and build a movie poster around a clear visual idea. I also designed a concept album cover for Train, using geometry and a Constructivist style inspired by Max Bill. Both projects helped me practice composition and visual storytelling.

DIGI FEST

Spring 2024

Dear Raymond Arroyo

The University of Houston invites you to attend the Spring 2024 Digifest. Digifest is an annual event that bridges the gap between students and industry professionals.

Come see graduating Digital Media Students' portfolios. By networking with Seniors, you may find your future employee to take B & E Reprographics to the next level.

We look forward to seeing you!

Digital Media Program

The Digital Media Program at the University of Houston prepares leaders and visionaries for the industry. Students learn to produce media projects of all sorts, including social media, print, web, photographic, video graphic, transmedia, packaging, app design, and more. The program bridges the gap between art and technology, working closely with both designers and those who specialize in producing visual media.

Digital Media Areas of Emphasis

The Digital Media Areas of Emphasis provides students with more targeted instruction to be deeply conversant with particular areas of digital media. What they learn in the area of emphasis is more likely to change over time than that which they study in the core. Thus, the Area of Emphasis is considered a starting point that they enjoy rather than a goal in and of itself. All the fields within digital media are intertwined, like a fine tapestry. One cannot effectively exist without the others.

Digital Media Core

The Digital Media Core provides their students with a broad overview of all digital media technologies from social media to motion media to web media to print media. It also provides instruction in key leadership responsibilities such as sales, information systems, supervisory roles, project and team leadership, and quality control. This core is the most important part of a student's digital media education because it provides them with the "big picture" and covers concepts that are likely to remain stable throughout their career. As a result of studying the core, students will be able to adapt to changing technologies while helping customers meet their goals.
